

A DESIGN-SYSTEM BRIEF

One sky blue, four formats, no second color.

Quire is a cold-toned, chromatically monochrome design system for editorial documents. One serif carries hierarchy, one accent carries emphasis, everything else is rule lines and tints. The same system produces playbooks, white papers, resumes, and one-page reports — this page among them.

1

CHROMATIC COLOR

Sky blue #3a82c4. No second hue allowed, anywhere.

4

FORMAT PROFILES

Playbook, white paper, resume, and one-pager — same tokens, four shapes.

10

INVARIANTS

Hard rules the system will not break: cool canvas, two weights, labelled callouts, no shadows.

THE PALETTE IS LOCKED

There is no palette to pick from. Cool canvas #f6f8fb, a single sky-blue accent, and four cool-toned inks. Swap any of them and you produce a different system — not a variant of Quire.

ONE SERIF CARRIES HIERARCHY

Fraunces sits at 54 px on covers and 12.5 px in body, with two weights only — 400 and 500. Sans appears only on UI chrome: eyebrows, page numbers, table heads, tags. Italic body is forbidden.

PAGE ARCHETYPES, NOT LAYOUTS

Every page belongs to one of seven archetypes: cover, TOC, chapter divider, standard content, stat-anchor, comparison, pull-quote. Changing the structure produces a different archetype, never a hybrid.

DEPTH FROM RULE LINES, NOT WEIGHT

No drop shadows, no gradients, no blur. Strokes stay ≤ 2 px; border-radius stays ≤ 3 pt. Hierarchy comes from rule lines, tints, and disciplined whitespace — the same vocabulary print has used for two centuries.

THE BET

The reader notices typography only when it is bad. Build a system that disappears, and your content is what they remember.
